The Horse Disease.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]
About three months ago several horses in the West Division City Railway Company's barn, on the Western avenue, were taken sick, the symptoms having been as follows: The extremities were cold, a discharge ran from the eyes and nose; in some cases there was hemorrhage from the lungs. Complete prostration followed, and a cough set in. The visible portions of the mucous membranes were highly injected. The first symptom noticeable was a trifling "dumppishness" displayed by the poor beasts, who appeared to an outsider merely a little out of sorts, and such that a person not accustomed to horses would overlook entirely. In no two cases were the symptoms entirely alike, but they embraced the above, with permutations and combinations, until in three months 50 of them had been taken sick. By judicious attention and treatment, they have nearly all been rescued, only three having been lost, one of them from a disease incident to that from which he had been cured. There is one mare at the barn at present whose death is hourly expected. She has been suffering from what Dr. J. D. Tuthill, the veterinary surgeon, describes to be pleuro-pneumonia—a combination of pleurisy and pneumonia, and yesterday afternoon she had been ailing for 36 hours.

A reporter yesterday afternoon paid a visit to Dr. Tuthill, who had attended the sick horses, and learned from him some interesting facts, which will be found valuable by those who own horses.

The disease from which the poor animals in the barn have been suffering is an epidemic of a typhoid character, but whether it is identical with the horse disease from Canada Mr. Tuthill could not say. It was not, in his opinion, infectious, but epidemic, or epidemic, if the term be preferred. It is not a new disease. It has been treated in the old country, and successfully combated. All horses are subject to it throughout the year, but especially in the spring and fall. Like other similar diseases, the severity of the different epidemic assaults is subject to great variation. One season brings a mild and almost imperceptible attack of its another a virulent and destructive one, such as seems to have come upon the continent. The duration of the disease varies as much as the premonitory symptoms. Two horses that died in the West Side stables were sick for 36 hours only. Others have been sick for weeks. Before a horse is thoroughly convalescent, and fit to work after an attack, a month or six weeks must pass by. All have been under treatment; some are so far recovered as to be at work again, the disease having left no permanent traces upon its victims. Some of the cases have commenced with an attack upon the throat; others were complicated with bronchitis; in others pleurisy, and in others again pleuro-pneumonia. Great prostration has followed in every case. Sometimes rheumatism has set in. The symptoms are typhoid in character, and require instant attention and prompt treatment; otherwise there is danger that the disease will have obtained such headway that recovery is doubtful, even if possible. At the same time Dr. Tuthill does not regard the disease as fatal. While he cannot positively assert that it is the same as that which has been so destructive in the East, he has a strong belief that it is. The great mortality that has occurred he attributes more to the want of proper treatment (and consequent improper treatment) than to the disease itself. He had treated fifty cases, and all but three of his equine patients had recovered. One of these latter had recovered from his attack and was getting along nicely, when rheumatic inflammation of the hock joint set in, and the poor animal died. It is astonishing how the disease parts sympathized with one another, and how frequently rheumatism and pericarditis ensue on the disappearance of the disease. When the disease assumed the form of typhoid pneumonia it was very difficult to cope with it.

While he was not aware of the existence of any other cases in the city, he had observed several similar in symptoms to those at present under treatment during the spring, and mentioned the fact, but it had died out without causing any alarm. They were probably sporadic cases. He believed that the West Side Car Company in the construction of the barn had materially provided against any great mortality among their horses. The barn was on the ground floor, and better ventilated and cleaner than any in the city. These causes and the prompt treatment of diseased animals had resulted in his saving so many and losing so few. Should the disease prove to be the dreaded epidemic, as he had no doubt it would, the dirty, ill ventilated character of the livery and boarding stables, omnibus stables and sale stables, together with the overcrowding which they were compelled to put up with, would produce a terrible mortality. Chicago has at present more horses than any city in the world of its population, and less accommodation for them.

The exciting cause of the disease is cold, Dr. Tuthill assumes, and it might be called epidemic catarrh. He recommends that preparations be made through the city to meet the disease, and he suggests the liberal sprinkling of bars, floor, walls ceilings and cribs, with chloride of lime. Let in all the air possible, he says. Don't be afraid of fresh air. In an underground stable ventilation must necessarily be difficult, but even here more air can be let in than is generally admitted. Keep the floors clean; clear away the excretions as often as possible; let the horses have regular exercise and plenty of it, but don't overwork the poor creatures for your own good.

A special correspondent in Canada informs us that over one-half of the horses on the line of the Great Western Railroad are laid up with the disease, and that it is working westward.

Mrs. O'Leary's Cow.—The people of Chicago are not ungrateful. Looking at the magnificent buildings erected on the site of the ashed desert of a year ago, and the countless improvements which could never have been made but for the clean sweep of obstructions by the fire, they turn with grateful hearts towards Mrs. O'Leary, whose cow and kerosene lamp combined caused the conflagration, and propose to give a grand ball for the benefit of that lady, the proceeds to be devoted to reinstating her in her former position and condition, and to the purchase of another cabin, cow and lamp.
